Opponents: Use existing resources

A women's resource center could undermine efforts for equality, those against the center say.

By AMY LEAVITT
Universe Staff Writer

The proposed Women's Resource Center has been the center of much controversy. Advocates of the center feel women have no place to turn for help. Those who oppose the center feel that a women's resource center would undermine the efforts of women to gain equality.

Andrew Gustafson, 19, a junior majoring in history and philosophy, from Danville, Calif., has been known for his views against the proposed Women's Resource Center. Gustafson said he did not know if a resource center was or was not needed, but he said he feels that more research needs to be done before constructing a center. He did not deny that women have problems, but thinks we need to take a closer look before making a decision.

Margaret Smoot, director of BYU Public Communications, said in an article in the Oct. 23 issue of the Daily Universe, "If students' needs are being met by the existing programs on campus, there may be no necessity for an official center."

Many have suggested expanding the Counseling and Development Center instead of creating a new center.

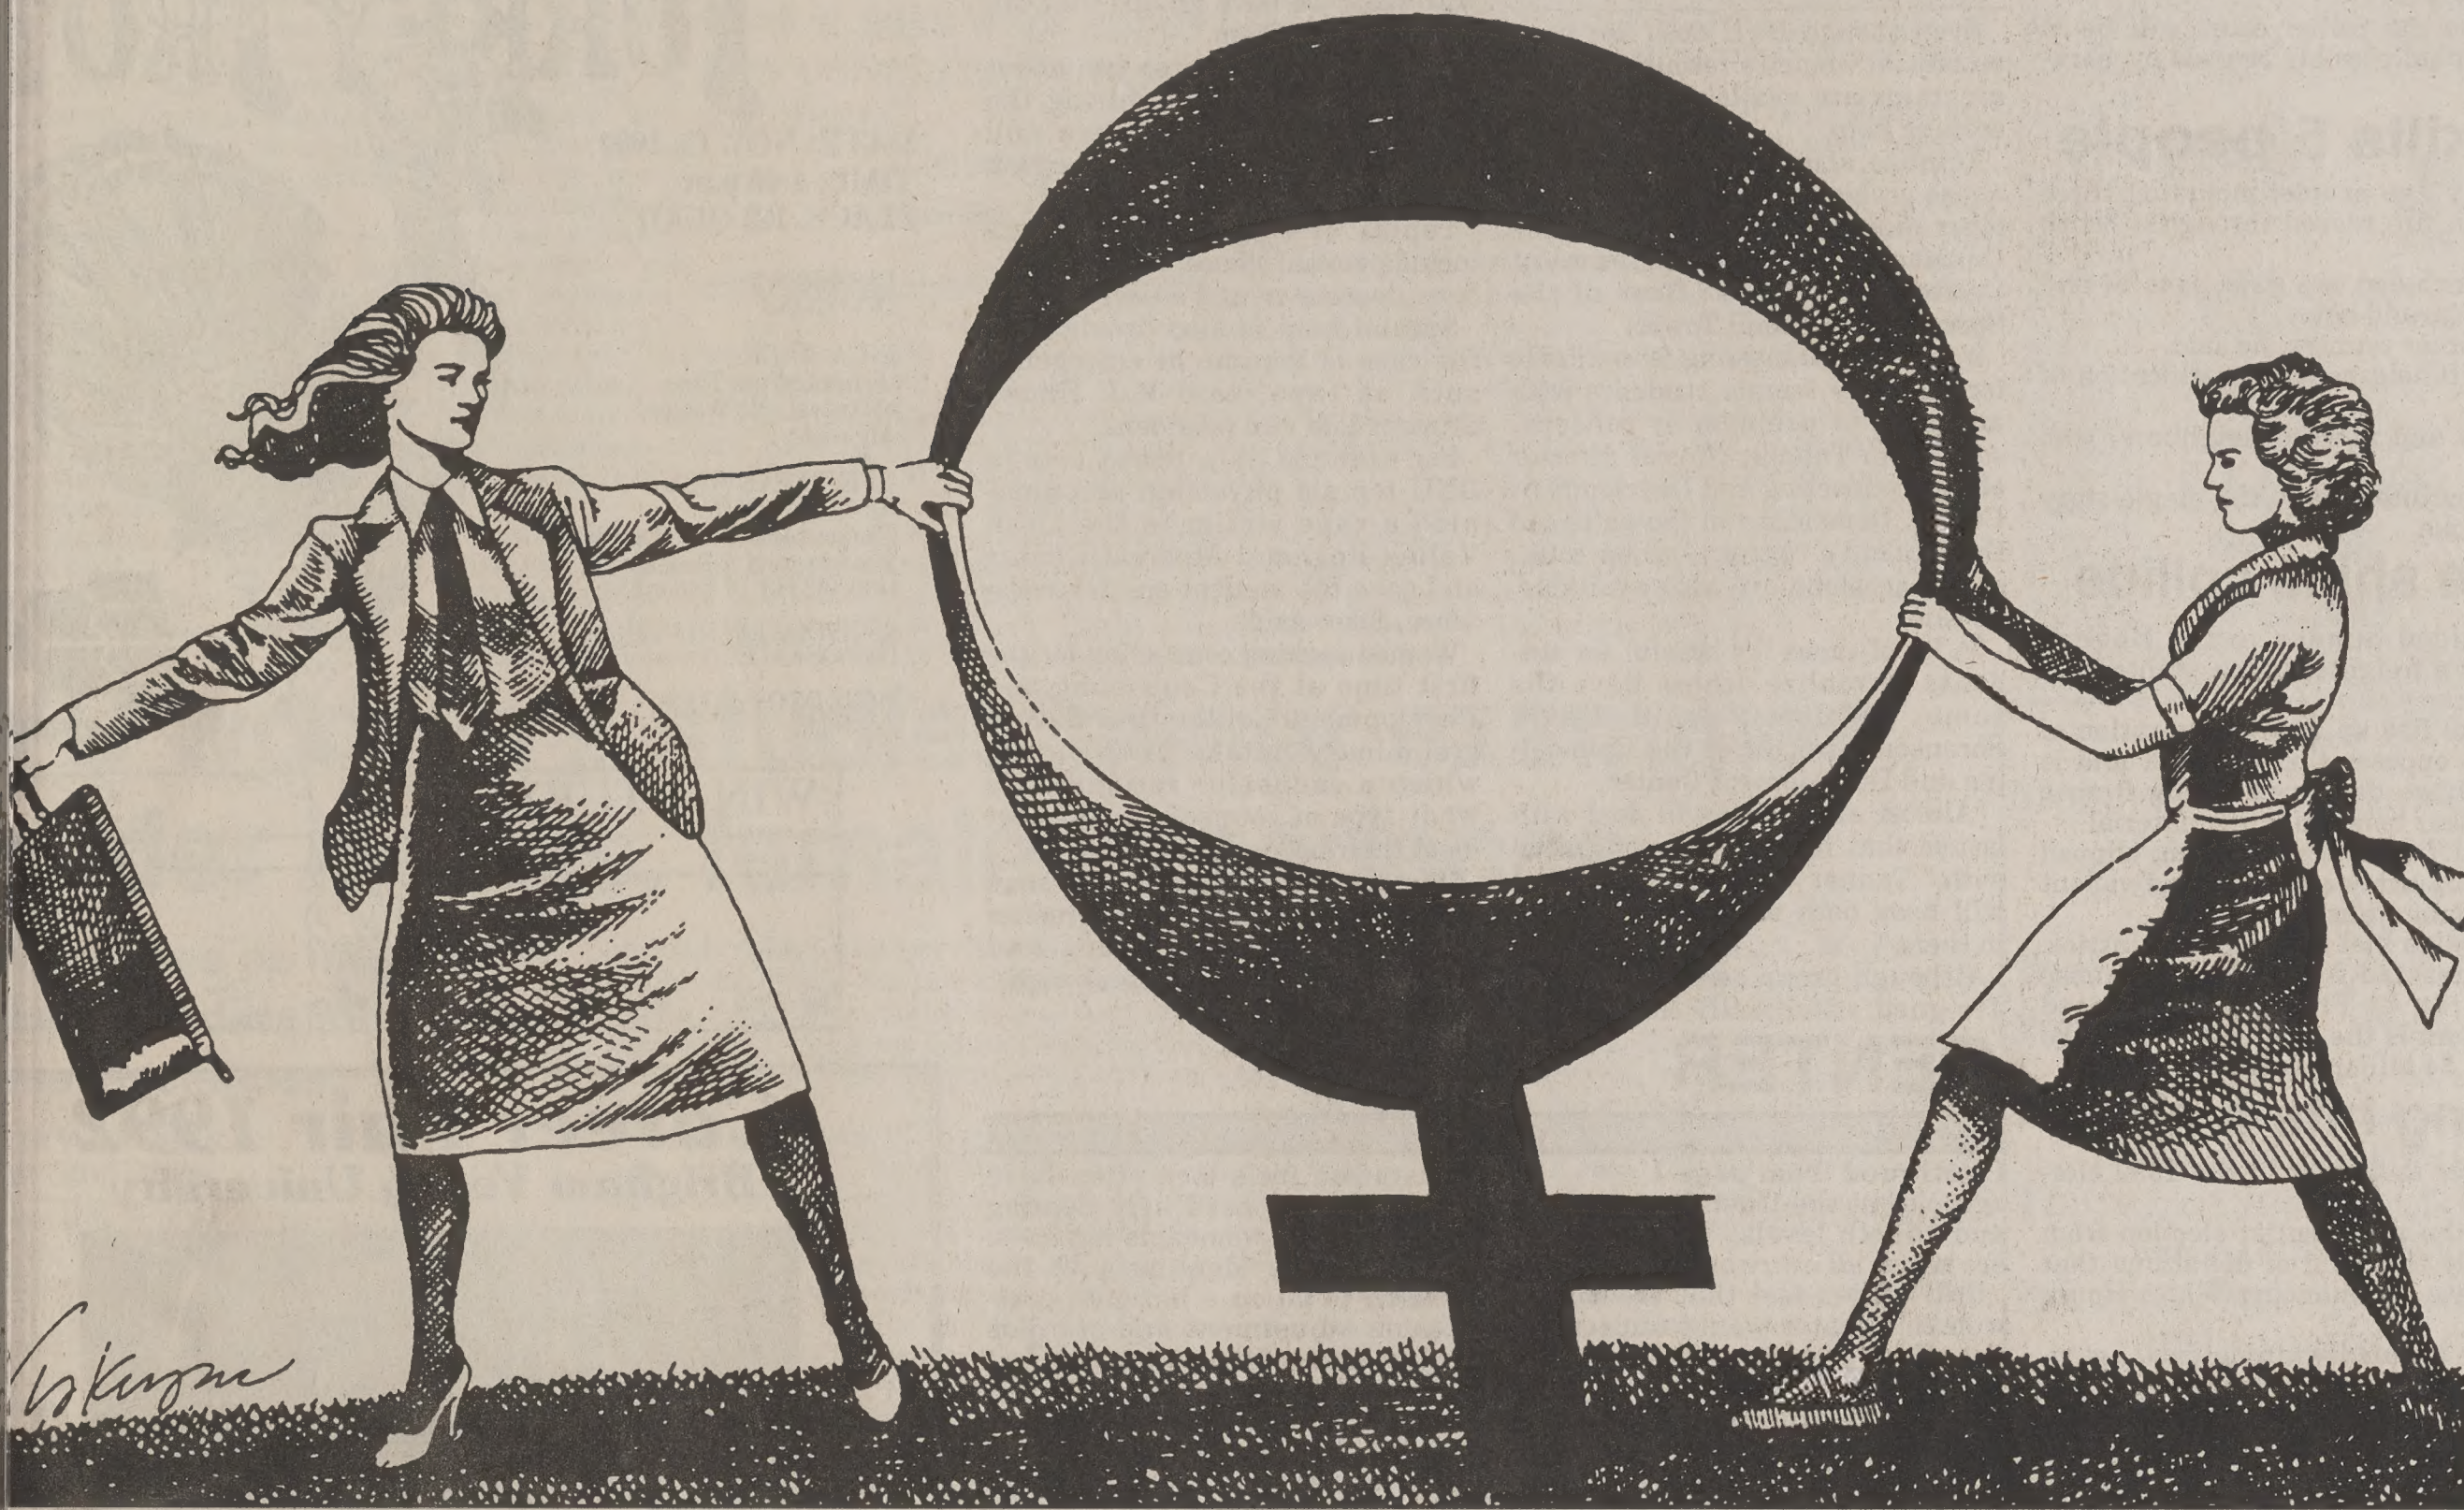

Wayne R. Herlin, associate dean of Student Life, said the existing counseling center is more than willing to help those who need it. When asked if the counseling center is overworked, with a need to create a new center, Herlin said, "The Counseling and Development center is not anymore overworked than they would be sponsoring a center."

The working draft of the mission statement of Counseling and Development Center states, "The mission of the Counseling and Development Center ... is to contribute to the university's commitment to help students realize their full human potential.... CDC provides instruction, programs and services.... CDC programs and interventions, therefore, are educational and developmental as well as individual and personal and promote wellness (or wholeness) for the entire University community."

"The Counseling and Development Center would do as good a job helping a victim as a women's center," Herlin said.

Gustafson pointed out that there are several other places where a woman can go for help. He said, "There are women's resource center would provide both personal and academic services, a woman in favor of the center says.

However, over 90 percent of reported domestic violence in Utah is directed toward women and 90 percent of those with eating disorders are women. In addition, the mass emergence of women into the world of careers and academia has only happened in recent decades and is still met with much resistance.

The Women's Resource Center should provide both personal and academic services as they pertain specifically to women's needs," said Alana Kindness, co-chair of the Student Advisory Council Women's Issues Committee.

Counseling already exists for some of these women's issues. In many cases, however, the counseling services are either booked for months or the counseling services are not well known, said Joanna Brooks, a member of the Coalition for a Women's Resource Center.

"A lot of students come to me with their problems because they have nowhere else to go," said Gail Houston, assistant professor of English. "I am not trained to handle these problems and there needs to be a place where women can go," she said. A report issued by the Utah Task Force of Gender and Justice said, "Violence is underreported because victims lack information about options available to them."

However, the need for a women's resource center extends beyond the criminal and physical obstacles women face.

"In our culture women are faced with dilemmas. We have been brought up with ambitions and then as we pursue them we face other things in our lives, like marriage and children. Do we give up our ambitions?" Brooks asked.

In addition to the difficult choices women are faced with when trying to balance education and family, women are a minority in many fields.

"Traditionally the university was set up for men, and in fields where women haven't been, such as science, we have to go out of our way to recruit them and support them," Houston said.

Brooks said in our society hostile attitudes toward women seeking degrees still exist.

The obstacles women face are then compounded with the difficulty of leaving home and being on your own for the first time, Kindness said. Thus, a college campus is an appropriate place for a women's resource center.

The proposal for a women's resource center is not unique to BYU, Brooks said.

Many universities like Harvard, Stanford, the University of Utah and Utah Valley Community College already have women's resource centers.

Why should BYU join the ranks of the many universities and community colleges which have women's resource centers?

Besides the reasons previously mentioned, "A women's resource center could be used as a place to train bishops to deal with women's issues, like sexual crimes, eating disorders and other forms of abuse," Kindness said.

SAC has already been invited to help develop a packet for bishops to help them understand women's issues, and a women's resource center could further this effort.

"Programs meant to help people are very much a part of the church.... The resource center is like another social service offered," Houston said.

"We would like people to utilize the resource center whether they have faced some crisis or not, because at some point in their life they will face them. The center is a way to become informed and prepared," Kindness said.

'Glass ceiling' an unwelcome shelter for women more and more women are fighting today to break through barriers that keep them out of management positions.

By AULI RAMO
Universe Staff Writer

In this election year, women marched forth to break some of the existing political and sexual barriers.

The first black woman was elected to the U.S. Senate and several other women will accompany her in leading this nation.

For centuries, a woman's place was perceived to be only within the walls of her home. In the 1990s, more women are fighting to get the same acceptance and advancement opportunities in the workplace as their male counterparts.

But women still face a "glass ceiling" that excludes them from higher executive positions in the corporate world.

A glass ceiling is an invisible barrier of discrimination that keeps women from breaking into top management. Most women will have to face it during their careers.

There is a stereotype of women being dumb in the corporate world," said Janet Howard, assistant professor of management communications in the Marriott School of Management.

"It is hard to move out of the stereotype," Howard said. "To climb the corporate ladder, women are expected to lose their femininity and become sexual."

Sexual discrimination is an issue women must toggle with in more ways than one. Anita Hill's charge against former employer, Clarence Thomas, now a U.S. Supreme Court Justice, is just one example of alleged sexual harassment.

"It still exists — in all shapes, sizes and colors," Howard said.

She also said women always have to prove themselves in the business and economic world, while men do not always have to do the same. "Women's statements and comments are not considered as seriously as men's," she said.

"But women do it to themselves, too. There seems to be a question mark at the end of each comment a woman makes," Howard said.

"That is what the glass ceiling does to you," Howard said.

A report commissioned by the American Association of University Women concluded that girls face pervasive barriers to achievement throughout their precollegiate schooling. The glass ceiling for women begins in the classrooms.

The trend continues in the corporate world. In 1988, out of 853 corporate officers in the 25 largest companies in the United States, only 10 were women.

One out of 1,200 working women bring in a yearly income of $75,000 or more. The ratio is one out of 67 for men.

In the Aug. 12 issue of the Wall Street Journal, Labor Secretary Lynn Martin said the Labor Department is making progress in its efforts to get employers to break the glass ceiling that blocks women and minorities from moving upward in the management ranks. She conceded, however, that there still is much more work to be done.

This breaking through of glass ceilings also involves other obstacles. A study conducted by Catalyst, a non-profit research group that focuses on women's issues, found that women are not only facing glass ceilings, but are also facing "glass walls." Glass walls are barriers that keep women from moving laterally within the corporation.

To be able to shatter the glass ceilings, women must break down the glass walls.

Catalyst found that women are placed in staff or support positions in areas such as public relations or human resources and are steered away from jobs in areas such as marketing, production and sales.

"It's a choice between the 'Fast Track' and the 'Mommy Track,'" Howard explained.

"Women have the biological clock ticking which results in a war within them," Howard said.

She said because of the emotional nature of women, they have another obstacle to meet in the business world. "Emotions don't go with business," Howard said.

"It's a man's world. Women have to be smarter, more skillful and assertive, and still keep their femininity while looking like men."

Ricks will shut down trailer courts

REXBURG — Ricks College may beat BYU in shutting down an aging married-housing trailer court.

School officials announced last week they will close the college-owned trailer court south of campus Aug. 31, 1993.

"We are facing some major utility revamping and it would be very costly for us to bring (the trailer court) up to standards," said Jerry Price, assistant vice president of Student Life.

BYU announced last summer it would eventually replace the Wyview Park trailers with married student apartments for reasons similar to those cited by Ricks.

The Ricks trailer court currently houses 37 trailers owned by private individuals.

The college rents the spaces to those owners. The trailer owners and tenants have been notified of the closure, he said.

The decision has been in the planning stages for several years. "It's just been a matter of when it would close," Price said.

In the future, the area that once housed the trailer court will tie in more closely with Ricks' master plan and could possibly be used for parking, Price said.

South Jordan fire kills 5 people

SOUTH JORDAN, Utah — Officials say five people, including three teen-agers, were killed early Sunday when fire roared through a South Jordan home.

Police Chief John Parker said the dead included two girls, ages 14 and 15, two women, ages 50 and 80, and a 17-year-old boy.

Two of the victims were visiting from another country, he said.

The names of the victims were being withheld pending notification of relatives.

Two people survived the 4:41 a.m. fire and alerted neighbors, who called the fire department.

Parker said when crews arrived three minutes later, the single-story home was engulfed in flame and heavy smoke.

Japanese, Greenpeace ships collide

PARIS — A Japanese escort ship collided Sunday in the English Channel with a Greenpeace boat tracking a freighter laden with highly toxic plutonium, the Greenpeace crew said.

Japan is shipping the plutonium home to fire up a new generation of nuclear fast-breeder reactors. Greenpeace opposes the shipment and is tracking it, saying the plutonium poses huge dangers ranging from a spill to an attack by terrorists seeking nuclear bomb-making material.

The freighter Akatsuki Maru, carrying 1.7 tons of plutonium, slipped out of the French port of Cherbourg late Saturday after a day of violent clashes between security forces and environmentalists.

France, a leader in nuclear technology, treats fuel for several countries. The Akatsuki Maru's plutonium was extracted from spent Japanese reactor fuel at a plant near Cherbourg run by France's state-owned nuclear-fuel processing agency. The shipment is the first of 30 tons to be shipped back to Japan this decade under a $4 billion contract.

1992 election spending hits a high

WASHINGTON — Big money was bigger than ever in the 1992 election.

An estimated $100 million poured into the presidential election from corporations and fat-cat donors — exactly the kind of donations that post-Watergate reforms sought to eliminate by financing White House campaigns with tax dollars.

In the congressional races, big spending equaled winning once again, as all but a few incumbents survived the anti-Washington mood of the electorate. As usual, their war chests got plenty of help from political action committees.

One man who observed the abuses of that era, former Senate Watergate committee chief counsel Samuel Dash, agreed. "I think once again we're in a situation unfortunately where money is buying power," he said.

Republicans tapped corporate giants like RJR Nabisco, Joseph Seagram & Sons, Philip Morris and Arco. Agricultural giant Archer-Daniels-Midland and its chairman Dwayne Andreas led the list with more than $1 million to the GOP. Democrats got their own $100,000-plus donations from Hollywood giants like MCA and Sony, and labor unions like United Steelworkers of America.

Help is available to women through counseling center

Individual and group counseling is available at the Counseling and Development Center.

By SUZANNE HOGGE
Universe Staff Writer

Even though BYU does not have an official women's resource center, programs are available for women seeking help.

Female students with sexual abuse problems, eating disorders or other concerns can seek help at the Counseling and Development Center on the first floor of the Spencer W. Kimball Tower.

Individual counseling is available for full-time female students with any type of problem or concern, said Elvin Tanner, clinical director of the Counseling and Development Center. Depending on the nature of the student's concern, group counseling sessions are also available, he said.

"A lot of times it's helpful for students to realize others have the same problems," said David Sorenson, director of the Counseling and Development Center.

"Almost all groups will deal with issues that females are concerned with," Tanner said. "Many of them will have both males and females in them."

Although group sessions are not designed specifically for women, agencies at the federal, state, local and church levels. These centers are not at all overworked."

Still others feel that creating a women's center would undermine the efforts of women to gain equality.

Paula Kelly Harline, in a letter to the editor in the Nov. 5 issue of The Daily Universe said, "In the long run (a women's center) sends an undermining message: women are special; they have trouble working their way through the system; they are confused and powerless and therefore need collective power."

"Women need to pick themselves up and insist on equality," Harline said. "Women's centers give the impression that all women think alike and want the same things. Advocates of the women's center shouldn't think that they speak for all women on campus."

There has been some complaint that creating a women's center is denying that men have problems too. Bryan Hansen, 22, a junior majoring in genetic engineering, from Twin Falls, Idaho, said, "Creating a center just for women is unfair to men. For example, at the University of Utah the Women's Center offers math classes to reduce women's stress levels associated with math. What about men who have math problems?"

groups that deal with problems such as sexual abuse and eating disorders tend to be made up primarily of women, Sorenson said.

"Most of our groups are mostly women," said Robert Gleave, associate clinical professor of counseling and development. "We have several that are exclusively women. If they have a problem that they don't feel comfortable discussing with men, we have groups that can accommodate them."

The counseling center has about 20 counseling groups during the fall and winter semesters and about ten groups during the spring and summer terms, Gleave said.

Topics of the group sessions include sexual abuse, eating disorders, depression and anxiety.

Special help is also provided in the case of trauma or emergency such as rape, said R.J. Snow, Student Life vice president.

For example, in a recent case, a BYU female physician accompanied a rape victim to the Utah Valley Regional Medical Center and gave the student special assistance, Snow said.

Women seeking counseling for the first time at the Counseling and Development Center first have a preliminary "intake" interview in which a counselor recommends what type of counseling will best meet their needs, Tanner said.

"We see any student that desires assistance, not only for personal issues, but career issues and adjustment issues," Sorenson said.

Gustafson feels men often have problems they need help dealing with that most women do not have. These include "dealing with the decision to go on a mission, post-mission adjustment and steroids are just some of those problems."

"A women's resource center is inherently sexist because it implicitly excludes men," Gustafson said. "How can we form a sexist organization to fight sexism?"

Faculty seminar on feminism focuses on BYU needs, issues

Group discussion of feminist texts helps faculty understand realities of feminism.

GREEN JOHNSTON
Staff Writer

Feminism is the topic this semester's seminars held on Tuesdays to all BYU faculty. The seminar is sponsored by the Philosophy department and the Women's Research Center. Every year the philosophy department hosts a semester of seminars on a topic of interest to the faculty who wish to participate.

The topic for this semester was feminism. After many of the BYU faculty expressed an interest in having a seminar on feminism, it has become of major interest to the faculty.

Paula Faulconer, chair of the philosophy department, said the seminars have been a success so far. Faulconer said 30 to 40 faculty members attend each week for a half hour.

During the seminars, faculty members are reading and discussing three different books on feminism to help them understand the varieties of feminism. Members of the seminar take turns making presentations on the material and leading the discussions.

Wayne Herlin, assistant dean of Student Life, said he started attending the seminars after he received an invitation extended to all faculty. Herlin said that an equal number of men and women attend the seminars which helps to keep them balanced, but since there are more men on the faculty than women, the women are better represented as a whole.

Herlin said the seminar deals with feminism as both a real and philosophical issue, and generally the discussion comes back to the needs and reality of feminism at BYU.

"The seminar has managed to make me much more aware of the feminism issues and to know of and be more sensitive to the concerns of women both here at BYU as well as the world," Herlin said. Herlin said it has taken some time for staff members to develop an understanding and trust with each other. Herlin said, "A few times professors have really gone at each other, but it has been a healthy exchange that has led to group openness."

Herlin said, "I started from ground zero, I had no feelings on women's rights. I haven't agreed with everything I've heard, but at least I'm aware of what is going on and can form my own opinions."

Claudia Harris, assistant English professor an assistant professor of English, regularly attends the seminars. She says she feels good about what has happened, but has also been surprised at how difficult it is to discuss feminism in a group setting.

Harris said, "I feel very good about the seminars on feminism here at BYU, and think it says a lot about this university for holding them. Other schools I've been at would have never addressed or recognized the feminism issue, or held seminars like these."

Harris said she has also been surprised at the amount of resistance she has seen in the seminar to actually discuss feminist theory, because she thought that was the whole purpose of the seminars.

Harris said at BYU the professors are very passionate about their views on feminism, both for it and against it.

Harris said she has not changed any of her views because of the seminars, but is glad she has been able to participate in the group even though at times it has been painful.

Harris said, "We read things in the book and I see my same experiences put into words for the very first time, and my personal experiences feel validated. Then when we discuss these things in the seminar and people say they don't really happen, they try to invalidate them, this has been painful for me at times."

The three books the faculty are reading for the seminars this semester are Kathrine Mac Kinnon's "Toward A Feminist Theory of the State," Drucilla Cornell's "Beyond Accommodation," and Elizabeth Spelman's "Inessential Woman."

BYU women's studies minor examines gender issues, female experience

Program focuses on integrating gender considerations with various disciplines.

WICKY HANSEN
Staff Writer

The women's studies minor may be an area of interest for anyone intrigued by women's issues. The minor, which is a part of the Women's Studies Institute, the minor gives students an opportunity to examine women's issues, including history and writings about women's lives and gender issues.

The focus at this point is to integrate gender considerations and women's experiences in various disciplines," said Kae Sawyer, administrator of the institute.

The minor is designed to provide both classroom discussion and an emphasis on the male experience.

The one-year-old minor offered through the Department of Sociology is designed to highlight important contributions made by women in fields such as history, literature and science, while addressing feminist theory, Sawyer said.

"The feminist perspective is a part of it. Our approach is teaching feminist theory, but that largely comes from individual professors," she said.

Cami Courtright, 27, a graduate student from Los Altos, Calif., said, "People at BYU sometimes associate women's studies with militant feminism or political activism. Part of the studies do take an activist slant, but many people misunderstand true feminist scholarship."

Courtright, who is the instructor of Introduction to Women's Studies, said any negative feedback to the minor comes from lack of exposure to feminism and women's studies.

Jennie Kastler, 22, a senior from Seattle, Wash., majoring in humanities, said her experience in the minor has impacted her life.

"It's really fulfilling for me and has been a life-changing experience. All my life I have been learning of men and their contributions to society. The women's studies minor has empowered me personally to achieve excellence," she said.

Kastler said many men consider women's studies and feminism a threat

"The minor does not male bash. We need to have an open mind and understand that most women are not against men," she said.

Karen Davis Boyd, 22, a senior from Los Angeles, Calif., majoring in psychology, has been interested in gender studies for several years.

She was pleased to see BYU offer a women's studies minor and said, "They (women's issues) are important issues directly related to women's contributions and feminist studies which are not addressed in most classes."

Channing Williams, 23, a junior from Cincinnati, Ohio, majoring in economics, said, "As long as it doesn't degenerate into a forum for male bashing, I think it would really bring new light to the university."

The first women's studies programs were created at universities and colleges in the late 1970s. Such programs grew out of the women's movement and the increased social consciousness about the uniqueness of women's lives.

Women's studies courses are generally designed to acknowledge, accentuate and celebrate women's experience in all disciplines, literature from the institute said.

Icicle makes a mess of rooms in May Hall

By SARAH SHELDEN
Universe Staff Writer

Students living in May Hall in Helaman Halls were inconvenienced last week when black soot from the central furnace system shot up through their rooms' vents.

The soot came from the equipment room of May Hall as a result of the cold weather early last week.

"They had a small water leak and with the cold snap, it formed an icicle which broke off in the fan housing," said Howard Davis, manager of Helaman Halls. "The icicle tumbled among the blades of the fan which had dust settled on them. When the heat came on, the dust blew up to six apartments."

The students living in the hall reported the soot covered the carpet, blinds and walls in at least ten rooms causing damage to clothing, bedspreads and pictures. Two students had their computers and printers exposed to the soot but they did not appear to be damaged.

"Our biggest concerns were our computers and the time wasted cleaning someone else's mess," said Heidi Roberts, 18, a freshman majoring in elementary education from West Jordan. "My roommate and I had to spend seven hours cleaning our room."

May Hall Resident

Helaman Halls has offered to pay the dry-cleaning bills for damaged clothing and any other damage done to the student's belongings.

The entire furnace system will undergo a maintenance cleaning in May after the students leave. Helaman Hall administrators have decided to wait to do the cleaning until after winter semester so student belongings will not be damaged again, Davis said.

Several students are angered by what they feel is a cavalier attitude Helaman Hall administrators have taken.

"If May Hall is this way, I would assume it is that way throughout Helaman Halls," said Dayna Treharne, 18, a freshman majoring in psychology from Bedford,

Texas. "I think it's sad that with the money we pay for our rooms every month, we can't breathe clean air."

"We all put towels over our vents because we're afraid the soot will come up again and damage our things and now our rooms are freezing because we're blocking the heat."

Although the students on the floor have complained of tasting the dust on their lips, in their throats and talking with raspy voices, no one is having trouble breathing.

BYU professor wins award from Continuing Education

Universe Services

The Division of Continuing Education presented J. Lloyd Eldredge and Michael L. Ballam its annual Excellence in Teaching Awards.

This award is presented to a BYU professor and a faculty member from another university.

J. Lloyd Eldredge, a BYU professor of elementary education, received this award for his significant contribution to students in Division of Continuing Education through his high-quality teaching and his personal interest in those who take his courses, said Richard

C. Eddy, dean of Continuing Education.

Eldredge has worked at entry level positions in public education and has served in several capacities with the Utah State Board of Education.

Michael Ballam, a Utah State professor of music, received this award for his outstanding teaching ability and his unique contribution to the Church Educational System and Continuing Education programs, Eddy said.

Ballam, an internationally acclaimed tenor, has performed opera's most demanding roles in concert halls around the world.

Cougs stifle Lobos' offense

By JUSTIN ROWLEY
Universe Sports Writer

The WAC's leading rushing defense continued to improve Saturday as BYU shut out the New Mexico Lobos and helped the Cougars to a 35-0 victory.

The shutout marks the first time the Cougars have blanked a team since they beat the Lobos 65-0 in 1988.

"Our defense played extremely well," said BYU head coach LaVell Edwards. "Our defense has played outstanding all year long."

BYU was led defensively by outside linebacker Kevin Nicoll (20 unofficial defensive points), who recorded four unassisted tackles and knocked down two third-down pass attempts by Lobo quarterback Stoney Case.

BYU scored 35 points and could have scored more had they avoided four turnovers (two fumbles and two interceptions), three of which came in the first half.

BYU's first two scores came in the first quarter off 19- and 24-yard runs by Jamal Willis. The Cougars caught the Lobos offside on both plays, but the Lobos' quick start didn't seem to gain them any advantage on either play as Willis scored both times with little resistance.

BYU scored 14 more points in the second quarter.

Freshman tight end Terence Saluone reached up with his left hand and caught an overthrown Ryan Hancock pass, turning it into a 47-yard touchdown play to make it 21-0.

The Cougars took a 28-0 lead before the half on Willis' most exciting touchdown, a 71-yard score. After taking the ball from Hancock on an inside handoff from the shotgun, Willis burst through the line and outran the Lobos' secondary.

"I was just trying to keep the defense from getting me, that's why I was scoring so much," said Willis, who finished the game with 149 yards off 16 carries with three touchdowns.

The 28-0 lead proved to be more than enough of a cushion for the Cougars defense.

The only time the Cougars' shutout seemed in jeopardy was with a little over eight minutes left in the game. Lobo return man Marcus Goodloe ran a Brad Hunter punt to the BYU 15-yard line before being taken down by Hunter.

The Lobos gained a first down on the BYU three-yard line on a pass from back-up quarterback Fred Schweer to Winslow Oliver. On first down, Oliver ran the ball to the Cougar two-yard line, but that was as close as New Mexico came to scoring.

Soccercats lose chance at nationals in Las Vegas

By LARRY D. ALLEN
Universe Sports Writer

The BYU men's soccer team's dream of winning the extramural national championship ended Friday. The Soccercats lost to the University of Arizona 1-0 in Las Vegas in the qualifying rounds for the nationals.

The Soccercats were the No. 1 seed in the qualifying rounds and Arizona was No. 2.

"Arizona caught us off guard. They took a shot from about 25 yards out and surprised us," BYU coach Tom Skousen said.

"They only had the ball two or three times on our side of the field. They played all eleven of their players on defense. It was hard to get a good shot off with so many defenders," Skousen said.

"Everyone was surprised when we lost to Arizona. We were going to be the No. 2 seed in the nationals in a field of about 100 teams.

The team that would have been seeded No. 1 seed in the nationals, the University of Texas El Paso, ended up losing to Weber State, Skousen said.

The Soccercats played one last game on Saturday against Arizona State University. BYU was expecting to play against Texas Tech.

BYU beat ASU 5-0 with goals from Ryan Wilson, Corey Cuvelier, Greg Christensen and two from Hugh Smith.

Skousen said he'll be back next year as coach. And most of the team will be back as well, along with some players returning from missions.

"Next year's team will have more experience on it," he said.

UNIVERSALS — The Soccercats ended their season with a 19-3-1 record They outscored their opponents 91-22 BYU averaged 3.95 goals per game Their opponents averaged 0.95 goals per game.

Women spikers survive Lobo scare, now 21-3

By JENNY SIDDOWAY
Universe Sports Writer

In a Saturday night thriller, the eighth-ranked Cougar women's volleyball squad finally had a chance to defend its ranking in a five-game match against defending Western Athletic Conference champs No. 15th New Mexico.

BYU, who had yet to play a five-game match, dropped the first two games to the Lobos before bouncing back and winning the match 13-15, 15-9, 15-6, 16-14.

The Cougars easily downed the University of Texas-El Paso on Friday, 15-5, 15-7, 15-13.

Against New Mexico, "We made some mistakes that put us in a hole," BYU head volleyball coach Elaine Michaelis said. "We had some serving mistakes and they played very well. They got their confidence up and when that happens, they play well."

The see-saw affair witnessed both teams display tough serving, strong defense, powerful hitting and both physical and emotional endurance.

In the first game, the Cougars had 10-3 and 13-8 leads only to watch the Lobos score the last seven points to win the first set.

The second game proved equally exciting as the score was knotted at 6-6. Following nine consecutive sideouts, Lobo head coach Laurel Brassey and senior setter/outside hitter Sharon Browning were each slapped with yellow cards from the head official for unsportsmanlike behavior. New Mexico then pulled ahead to win the game 15-11.

Following a talk in the locker room, the Cougars came out ready for the third game and reeled off the set's last six points to win the game.

BYU won the fourth set 15-6 starting quickly and earning a 5-0 advantage on its way to forcing a fifth and decisive game.

As in international play, all fifth games in NCAA play are speed-scored. This means that every serve has a point attached. If a team earns a sideout, they get a point along with the right to serve the next ball. Additionally, a team does not need to be serving to win the match, but can be victorious on a sideout.

The Cougars took a 9-6 lead. New Mexico scored the next three points to tie the score. The Lobos took a 13-10 lead that improved to a 14-12 advantage.

But BYU fought back. Tea Nieminen powered in a decisive kill, followed by a Carol Rawson tip that tied the game, 14-14. The Lobos hit the ball into the antennae, setting up match-point for BYU. On the final serve, Lobo standout Tania Gooley hit the ball wide to end the trying match.

"We were challenged," Michaelis said. "We showed we could compete. When we were serving tough, we could control the game. I can't single out any players. Everyone played very well."

For the Cougars, Shannan Skidmore had 20 kills and 19 digs, Nieminen had 20 kills and Michele Fellows, who played on a slightly sprained ankle, recorded 12 kills, 14 digs and seven blocks. Megan Kennedy had 17 digs and Charlene Johnson recorded 58 assists.

For the Lobos, both Gooley and Shannon St. Denis finished with 18 kills while Browning recorded 13 kills, 33 assists and 16 digs.

The match was played in front of a season-record crowd of 2,404 fans. BYU improved to 21-3 overall, 10-0 in WAC and ran its winning streak to 20 consecutive matches while New Mexico fell to 14-9, 5-5.

Students, faculty to present various ballet performances

SABEL HUELVES
Universe Staff Writer

A variety of favorite and original pieces choreographed by students and faculty will be presented at the Theatre Ballet Showcase Friday and Saturday at the Dance Production Studio in the Arts Building at 7:30 p.m. Ann Thompson, promotional director, said the Showcase includes some dance favorites, as pieces "Sleeping Beauty," "Paquita" and a piece by the popular composer Pachel-

Regional Dance America 1992 Festival, in Boise, Idaho, where she received a full tuition scholarship to the annual National Choreography Conference Summer program.

Another piece to be performed at the concert is, "The Time Has Come," choreographed by Lisa Clements, 24, a graduate student in ballet from Midvale.

Clements said her piece represents the coming of Christ. "It's a very happy piece to celebrate His coming," Clements said. A group of non-college youth dancers will perform "Prologue" from "Sleeping Beauty," Allen said.

Thompson said the traditional favorite "Paquita," a Spanish dance will be performed at the concert. She said this piece will be performed in South Africa during a Theatre Ballet tour in April.

Thompson said Ballet Showcase is an "excellent concert to attend." "These guys are about as good as dancers from Ballet West," Allen said.

Tickets for the concert are available at the dance ticket office in 165 RB.

Shani Olsen (jumping) and Kolette Holding (seated) are among many of the dancers that will be featured in BYU's Theatre Ballet Showcase Friday and Saturday.

Students needed to model in BYU's Fashion Focus

By DOLLY DORIUS
Universe Staff Writer

A model search is on for Fashion Focus '93, the annual clothing and textiles student design fashion show.

Tryouts for the Mar. 12 show will be Nov. 14 from 9 a.m. to 11 a.m. at 15 KMB. Applications are available in the Clothing and Textiles office, 3256 SFLC. Applications must be turned in by Nov. 13.

Approximately 13 men and 22 women will be selected as models, said Alicia Covili, president of Clothing and Textiles Club.

In Fashion Focus '93, models will be wearing original clothes, which students in the Clothing and Textiles Design Department will design specifically to fit the models, said Michelle Hyde, fashion show advisor.

Those selected are offered one credit for participation in the fashion show.

Interest in VOICE grows with both women and men

The club has received national media coverage trying to promote status of women.

LULIE C. DAVIES
Universe Staff Writer

Many remember VOICE as the women's organization that imposed a curfew on BYU last winter semester as a result to a suggestion that women did not go out unaccompanied at night. The curfew incident received national media coverage. VOICE is one of several women's groups on campus who are working to help women.

VOICE, BYU's club that works to promote the status of women, is concentrating its efforts this year on women's health issues, said Alicia Konchar Farr, assistant English professor and faculty adviser to VOICE.

The group invites special speakers to address women during their weekly Thursday night meetings. Rose Johnson from Utah Valley Regional Medical Center addressed the group Thursday on the subject of eating disorders.

Ah Clark, the committee coordinator for VOICE, said the club is to "talk about issues that directly affect women." Earlier this year they had a speaker who addressed the subject of women's AIDS.

The club was started about five years ago with only three students. It became an official campus club during the 1990-1991 school year, said.

The response to the club has been positive, she said. Nearly 300 students attended the opening meeting this year and there is an average weekly attendance of 70.

The administration of BYU has been very supportive of VOICE, said. The only opposition the club has received from them was denying a few speakers.

These speakers included a woman from the Women's Crisis Center who was to speak on the subject of rape, which the administration considered to be too controversial, and Carol Lynn Pearson because they did not consider her to be "doctrinally sound," Farr said.

Clark said there are also five men who regularly attend the Thursday night meetings. She also said some people come to the meeting out of curiosity "just to see what a feminist looks like."

There are also other women's groups on campus. The Student Advisory Council Women's Improvement Committee (WIC) is working with VOICE and other groups to get a BYU women's resource center. They have also been working on a survey to help determine the climate and events surrounding any gender concerns at BYU, said Alana Kindness, co-chair for SAC and WIC.

The committee also has been working on a 24-hour hot line where women can call in and receive information in a crisis, for child care, eating disorders and other referral information.

They are also working with University Police to get rape and assault prevention training as part of the curriculum for incoming freshmen and possibly making it a part of the required health class, Kindness said.

She also said the committee is working to provide packets to area bishops so they can refer victims or perpetrators of sexual offenses to area help services.

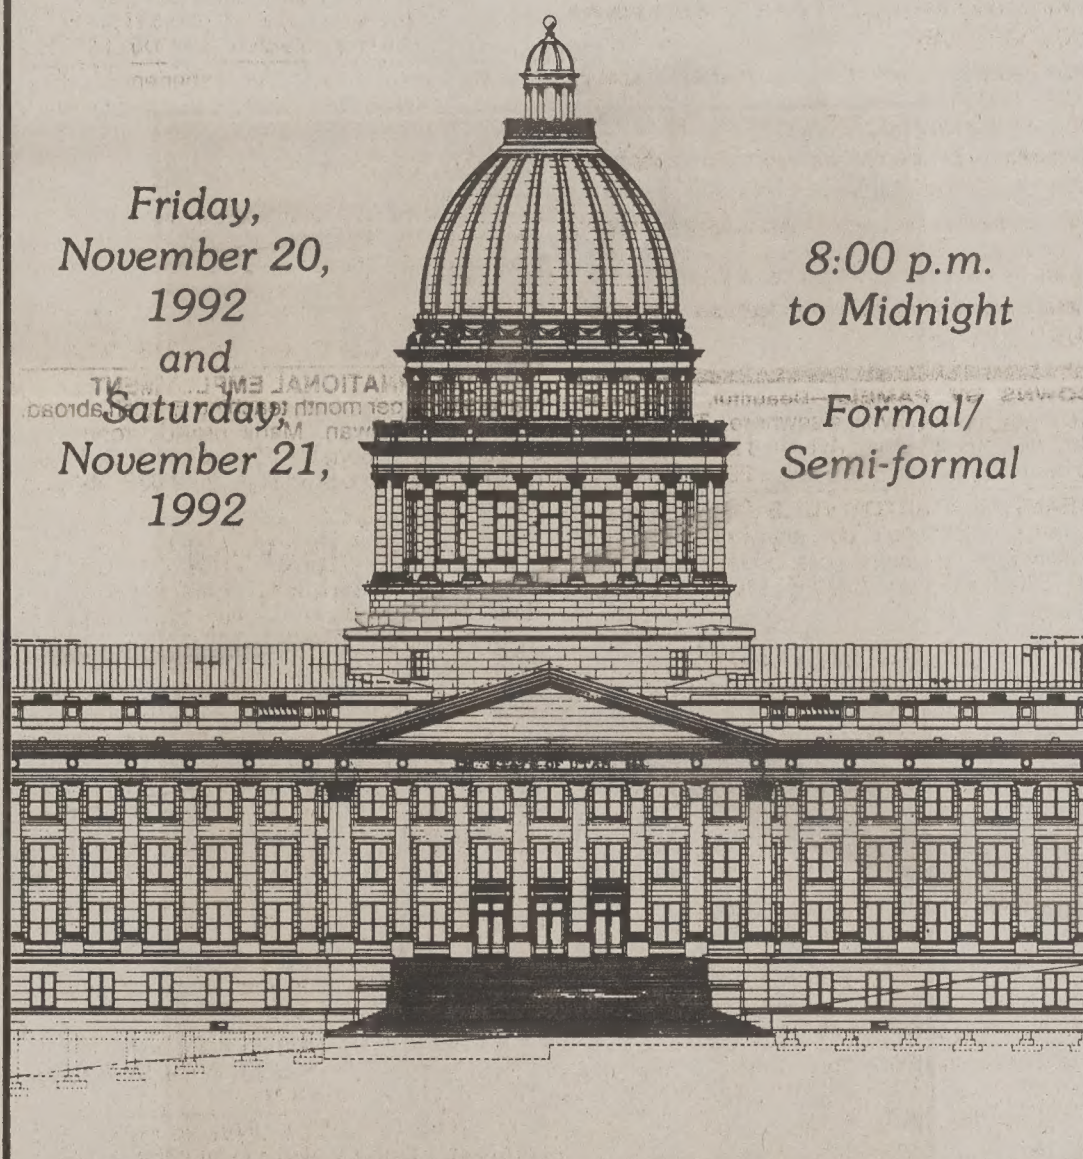

Other women's groups on campus include Women in Communication and Women in Management, Kindness said.

There are other groups available for women and those interested should check with their various colleges for more information.

Rachelle Miles, president of Women in Communications, said her club is part of a national organization that provides opportunities for students to make professional contacts within their fields. They also provide other training such as "shadowing" professionals for a day and help in other areas.

Kennecott offers to help firefighters

By MICHAEL KARAM
Universe Staff Writer

After agreeing to pay a $480,000 fine levied by the Environmental Protection Agency, the Kennecott Utah Copper Corporation is adding an additional $70,000 to fund the enhancement of Salt Lake County's Emergency Information System, a system that gives firefighters information in the case of a chemical emergency.

Kennecott was fined for improper disposal when some of its transformers were found to be leaking polychlorinated biphenyl (PCB) during a routine EPA inspection in 1991, EPA enforcement officer Dan Bench said.

But Bench said EPA terms are often misinterpreted by the public. "Almost all of the leaks were confined to the surface of the transformers," Bench said.

"In this case the violation was defined as improper disposal, but it's different than the public's view of improper disposal," he said.

"It was an unfortunate incident," said Fred Fox, director of environmental quality for Kennecott. "They found some discoloration on the surface of the transformers and it was defined as a 'leak.'"

Kennecott had been phasing out the transformers when the inspection occurred. The number of transformers has been reduced from several hundred to 36.

"We want to be PCB-free by the end of 1993," Fox said.

With EPA approval, Kennecott is funding the upgrade of Salt Lake County's EIS system. Kennecott offered various proposals to the EPA and they chose the computer system, Fox said.

The EIS system is invaluable to the fire department. It allows them access to information about what chemicals they are dealing with in an emergency situation. It even provides a chemical dispersion model in case of an evacuation, Captain Dennis Steadman, public information officer for the Salt Lake County Fire Department, said.

The new equipment funded by Kennecott will enable field units to have direct access to vast amounts of information in case of a chemical spill or other emergency, Steadman said.

"Before, the EIS system had to be manned manually to communicate and answer questions from field units," Steadman said.

"It made things difficult on week-ends, holidays or at odd hours. Now the field units will have a direct link with EIS and Kennecott to get the information they need on the spot. It's definitely a step in the right direction for us," he said.

A few Utahns have a shot at working for Clinton

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — Utah was not kind to president-elect Bill Clinton, but a few of its native sons might find their way into the new president's administration.

Clinton took third place in Republican Utah, behind George Bush and Ross Perot. Still, the Arkansas governor has some true-blue loyalists and strong Democrats to consider from the Beehive State.

Several people with Utah connections had jobs in the Bush administration — ranging from Bush's top advisers on both foreign and domestic policy to his surgeon general — but they will soon be looking for new work.

Rep. Wayne Owens could be one of those with a new job in Washington. While he lost his race for the U.S. Senate, Owens' vast experience on the House Foreign Affairs Committee and close friendship with many Middle East leaders could make him a candidate as an ambassador or a State Department official.

Scott Matheson Jr., the attorney who was a strong Clinton supporter, is considered a good candidate to become U.S. attorney for Utah.

Here's a BREATH of FRESH AIR

Especially For Youth Open House

Tired of the same old hum drum summer jobs? Come to an ESPECIALLY FOR YOUTH open house and find out about being an EFY counselor next summer. ESPECIALLY FOR YOUTH is a dynamic youth program, centered around gospel principles. We are looking for outstanding, college-age men and women to work as counselors for the summer. If you won't be here this summer, but will be in Florida, Tennessee, Virginia, Texas, Indiana, Alaska, Idaho, So. California, or Alberta, we will have regional conferences in your area and need counselors to work for one week. At the open houses we will explain the responsibilities and rewards of being a counselor. Refreshments will be served. Here are the dates and times of the open houses:

November 12, 1992 6 p.m. or 8 p.m. at 2258 HCEB (Harman Bldg)
December 1, 1992 6 p.m. or 8 p.m. at 2258 HCEB
Applications will be available at the open houses. Applications are also available at the Wilkinson Center Information desk and at 164 Harman Building, BYU. These applications must be turned in to 164 Harman Building NO LATER THAN 5 p.m. DECEMBER 10, 1992. If you have any questions, feel free to call 378-3817 or stop by our office at 164 Harman Building.
